Sea elephants, wild horses, camels - each played a part in the pre-Indian history of the area that we now call Orinda. However, many local historians begin the history of Orinda with the Mexican colonization of California about 200 years ago.

In 1835, the Mexican government granted 13,326 acres of land to Joaquin Moraga and his cousin Juan Bernal. This land grant was identified as Rancho Laguna de los Palos Colorados. Moraga's Adobe, built in 1841, remains today on a hill site above the present Del Rey Elementary School in Orinda. Although the adobe is part of a private residence, it is a local and California state historic landmark.

The area south of Orinda lies on a portion of Rancho Laguna de los Palos Colorados. Orinda's northern part lies on the 22,000-acre land grant known as Rancho El Sobrante, which was received by Victor and Juan Castro from the Mexican government in 1841.

After the era of the great ranchos, with their vast herds of cattle, Orinda passed into a farming period. Ownership of the Castro Sobrante land changed several times; and by 1876, William Walker Cameron had become the major landowner in the northern Orinda area. His wife, Alice Marsh Cameron (daughter of pioneer California settler and land owner John Marsh), was interested in the writings of 17th century poetess Katherine Fowler Philips. Miss Philips was known by her friends as the "Matchless Orinda". The magic of the name appealed to the Camerons as is evident in the naming of their tract, Orinda Park.

Then, in 1887, approximately 1200 acres north of the present freeway were purchased by Jose and Miguel deLaveaga of San Francisco. A son, E.L. deLaveaga, subdivided the property and established the town site of Orinda in the 1920's. The deLaveaga family was responsible for much of the development and character of the community as it is today.

After the Caldecott Tunnel opened in 1937, the area north and south of the freeway began to develop more rapidly. On July 1, 1985, Orinda was incorporated with a five-member City Council as head of government.

Today, Orinda is primarily a single-family residential community with a population of about 17,000. Many of the names of the past are still familiar to the community. Among them are: Glorietta, Casa Vieja, Nelson, Fish Ranch, Bryant, Miner, Lauterwasser, Wagner and de Laveaga. Appreciation for Orinda's fascinating history is reflected in a growing number of official historic landmarks. The deLaveaga Station, the only remaining station of the California & Nevada Railroad, was declared an historic landmark in the year 2000. Additional Orinda landmarks include a 14+ acre site within the original Miner Ranch property and original Orinda Store on Orinda Way. When Orindans proudly dedicated Theatre Square and the California Shakespeare Festival Amphitheater, they were watching history being made. Orinda's present, and its future, will someday be appreciated as its history.

BRIONES

(510) 562-PARK

With its rolling, grassy hills and secluded, shady canyons, Briones is a secret wilderness surrounded by the towns of central Contra Costa County. Although the park is close to Lafayette, Walnut Creek, Pleasant Hill, Concord, and Martinez, there are peaks within it from which you can see only park and watershed lands for miles in every direction.

Briones is an ideal park for hikers, runners, and horseback riders. There are five major access points, of which the two most developed are the Alhambra Creek Valley Staging Area off Reliez Valley Road near Martinez, and the Bear Creek Road Staging Area near Orinda and Lafayette.

LAFAYETTE RESOVOIR

MOUNT DIABLO STATE PARK

(510) 562-PARK

Dominates the landscape of the East Bay as its summit towers to an elevation of 3,849 feet above sea level. The roads on each side of the mountain are a cyclist's delight, carrying little car traffic and exposing backcountry scenery, which belies their proximity to the dense population centers nearby. The hill climbs are challenging and the remoteness is extraordinary. Call For Directions (925) 837-2525
